Their policy was limited to a boundless submission to the Holy See, and their efforts were turned to efface all traces of those changes lowing: which had been introduced during the 1859 reaction set in in all its unmitigated ferocity. The Kings of Naples, and for a long time of Sardinia, were more Papist than the Pope; and the consequence of their abject subserviency to High Papal interests was a rancor to the people against the priests, of which we have not as yet witnessed the final outburst. After Pius IX apostacy in 1849 a war to the knife began in Italy between the laity and clergy, which can only end in the utter separation of want a strong central Government—an stalment of a Constitutional Gov can, anything beyond these. ernment, measures had to be taken for the limitation of priestly ascendancy, measures against which the Pope began by protesting, but in which he ended by acquiescing. Mendizabal abolished the convents, confiscated their property and while acknowledging Ro-State, to a great extent screened the civil power from the encroachments of nan Catholicism as the religion of the the ecclesiastical authority. But he was not long at the head of affairs and constitutional liberties were soon trodden under foot by military dictators;
Queen Isabella, in her infatuation, would

In the eyes of her people her reputation of muy Catolica (very Catholic) constituted as great a claim to popularity as her character as muy Espanola (very Spanish). All the traditions and associations of the Spanih nation invariably tended to foster among them their bigoted pride of orthodoxy. The Spaniard's creed may be destroyed, but not changed. It is a perfect mystery to me how conscientious foreign Roman Catholics can visit those Southern countries and still own any connection with the groveling superstition which there goes by the name of religion. Those who look in at the Sanctuary of Atorha, or who visit the Chapel of the Virgin at Toledo, must be at a loss to find even the faintest trace of Christianity among the paraphernalia of the worse than Pagan idolatry which everywhere meets their eyes. In Lorain county, and no doubt throughout the State, a preconcerted scheme was agreed upon by the Radical leaders, communicated to their judges of elections, and thoroughly carried out by them. This is the scheme—that the vote of every negro should be taken without questions as to his right to vote under the State Constitution—that every Radical vote offered should be received, irrespective of the qualifications of the person offering it, and every Democratic vote offered should be rejected when the least pretext could be trumped up for rejecting it. In this county, Oberlin was selected as the pivotal point of operations, and she has made herself conspicuously infamous in executing the Radical decrees. Not content with the secret infamy of their scheme, the Radicals dispatched a Judge of one of our clear that the scheme was agreed upon by the Radical decrees. Obsolic in the Radical decrees are reconcerted as the pivotal point of call whom it may concern:

Nothing is easier than to turn a Spaniard into a thorough infidel; but to stop him at some half-way of rational belief is an utter impossibility—unless the cure proceeds from the very sources from which the evil has sprung. What the priest has done, the priest alone can undo. Should anything like a good understanding grow up between the emancipated laity and the clergy now deprived of the Sovereign's support, it is not impossible that the sounder part of the priesthood might aspire to place their religion on a different footing—a footing less at variance with the ideas of modern progress. Were the Temporal Power to come to an end, and the Church to be driven to her own resources, it is not impossible that both in Italy and in Spain reform of the most shocking abuses might arise from the Church the guidance of his priest, for good or will attempt nothing. It is well to guard against illusions. Society in the countries of Southern Europe cannot—for a long time—cannot, perhaps, forever—be emancipated from the clergy. Like the Italians, the Spaniards have proclaimed freedom of instruction. Indeed, both countries are clamoring for lay education. The truth is, however, that negligent and dangerous teachers as the priests may be, they are the only schoolmasters. Nothing has been found easier at Naples or Venice than to open schools, but to fill the instructor's chair has proved to be a very different undertaking.
